State presents plans to Council for new Grand River bridge

The plans for a new highway bridge over the Grand River were presented to the city council at the meeting on Monday night by the State Highway Department. The new bridge is scheduled to be bid in the last quarter of this year and completed in about a year. Drawings call for the new bridge to be constructed just east of the present bridge to straighten out the sharp turn at the north entrance. Two houses will have to be moved for a straight approach on the south side of the river.

The new bridge will be 30 feet wide, a 24-ft. roadway and 3 foot sidewalks on each side. It will be entirely built of reinforced and pre-stressed concrete.

Prayers in School

Rev. Robert Webber of the First Methodist Church reported to the council on the views of the clergy of the community regarding "prayers in school."

He told the council that the ministers and priest of the town had met and discussed "prayers in school" and agreed that they favored some type of prayers and Bible reading in school. Local areas should apply their own standards of application, the clergymen decided.

Selecting the type of prayer and Bible reading is the most difficult problem. The simplest form of religious observance in the school could be a few moments of silent prayer at the beginning of the day. Each student could then decide how to use this time, individual rights would be protected, Webber told the council.

Salt Water Contamination

Ed Burt, Lowell Water Consultant, appeared before the meeting to discuss ideas he had to eliminate the salt water contamination of the east well. This well is now undergoing repairs and Burt reported that it would be a good time to study the problem of salt in the water supply.

Lowell's water supply was damaged in the late 1930's when oil wells drilled north of town were not properly plugged. The salt water from deep underground came up through holes drilled in the rock formations and ruined the east well which furnished the city's water supply.

New wells were drilled west of town in the 1940's after an attempt was made to plug the abandoned oil test hole.

Burt told the council that he might be able to pin point the contamination and plug off the salt water. Testing would cost an estimated $2,500 and if the well that was causing the trouble was found another $2,500 would be needed to seal it off. The council decided not to go too deep in the testing but authorized a check of the east well while it is opened up for repairs.

Short $85,600

City Manager Olson revealed to the council that the city sewer treatment plant total cost of $402,700 will be $85,600 more than the city will receive from the sale of bonds and federal grant. The city originally planned to supply the funds for engineering and supervision of construction from general funds but higher costs overall built up to the 65 thousand figure. This money will have to be taken from city reserve funds. Money received from the sale of bonds was $216,000 and the federal grant is $129,870. Work is now underway with the first payment due the contractor of $3,700 for site work.

Residents of James Street were present at the meeting, asking for a sewer up that street. They were told to get a petition from the property owners asking for a special assessment district and the council would authorize construction.

The Council also authorized the purchase of seven new chairs for the council table.

Petition for zoning in Lowell Township

A petition has been received by the Lowell Township Board requesting the enactment of a zoning ordinance in the township. The board will take the matter up at the next regular meeting.

Zoning was proposed in the township about three years ago and was turned down in an election. Since that time Lowell Township has been one of the last areas of the county where trailers and sub-standard housing has been permitted.

Dream of new home shattered by untold re-zoning changes in city

Letter to the editor...

On March 9, 1966, the city manager issued a building permit to construct our first house for our family.

We have owned this land for nearly 10 years and have paid taxes to the city of Lowell just like any other hard-working citizen.

At the time we contracted for our house we were under the impression that our land was residential.

On March 30, 1966, after the basement was dug and footings poured for the basement foundation, the city manager came to our present home (which we rent) and informed us that our land was recently zoned industrial.

As you can imagine this was quite a shock to us. And now, after signing various contracts for our first house we are unable to build our house on our own land.

We were not informed that our land was even being considered for re-zoning. After re-zoning we were not informed of this either.

Now we have to go through the added expense of buying land for our new house.

Also, we will have to sell a piece of ground (5 1/2 acres) which is of no use to us for building, because it is impossible for us to build a factory.

But then, we are not the only land owners in this area who have no use for industrial land.

There are a few questions we would like to ask: What is the procedure of re-zoning? Does a land-owner have the right to know if his land is being considered for re-zoning? If re-zoning is passed shouldn't the land-owner be notified of this information? Who wanted this area rezoned? Shouldn't a city manager keep his maps up to date?

In our opinion he should know what land is residential and industrial before issuing a building permit.

The city manager apologized for his error, but is this enough? We have invested much more than just the $15,000 for a building permit. This, of course, will be refunded.

We know we are all human and we are all subject to mistakes but mistakes have to be paid for, too.

Only the Lord knows how much we have prayed for this house. But then, perhaps this is a blessing in disguise.

Perhaps we will be happier outside the city limits and away from the railroad tracks.

Sincerely,
Martin & Frances Koiman, Jr.,
Marty, Mary, Marlene
Amy, Diane, Susan & Sally

The May meeting of the Lowell Showboat Garden Club will be held at the home of Mrs. Jack Thorne with a plant and white elephant sale.

Attention artists

Attention all area artists. The Lowell YMCA would like very much to exhibit your work in the "Y" offices and library on Main Street.

Space is limited to two paintings per artist to be hung per month. All paintings and drawings should be framed or matted and backed with wire attached ready to hang. Call the Y, TW 7-7375, to reserve your space now!

Exhibits will be changed the first Friday of each month. Here's a chance to show the whole town what you can do, perhaps sell something, and at the same time contribute your talents to beautify a community project.
